

Scandal and Sabotage hits NASA under Neptune “negative” Mars

Soyuz, Shuttle Cited in Drinking Reports

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - After drinking heavily, an astronaut flew on a Russian spacecraft and another was deared to launch on a space shuttle, according to interviews by a panel of outside experts, the panel's chairman said Friday.

In the case of the shuttle, the mission was delayed for mechanical reasons and the astronaut wanted to fly a jet from Florida back home to Houston, said Col. Richard Bachmann Jr., head of the panel, created to assess astronaut health. He said he didn't know the outcome.

"In none of these can we say factually they did or did not occur," he added, speaking by telephone to a news conference held in Washington. He said it was not the panel's mission to investigate allegations and that NASA would have to ferret out details.

Space computer 'sabotage' probed

Nasa is investigating the apparent sabotage of a computer due to be flown to the International Space Station.

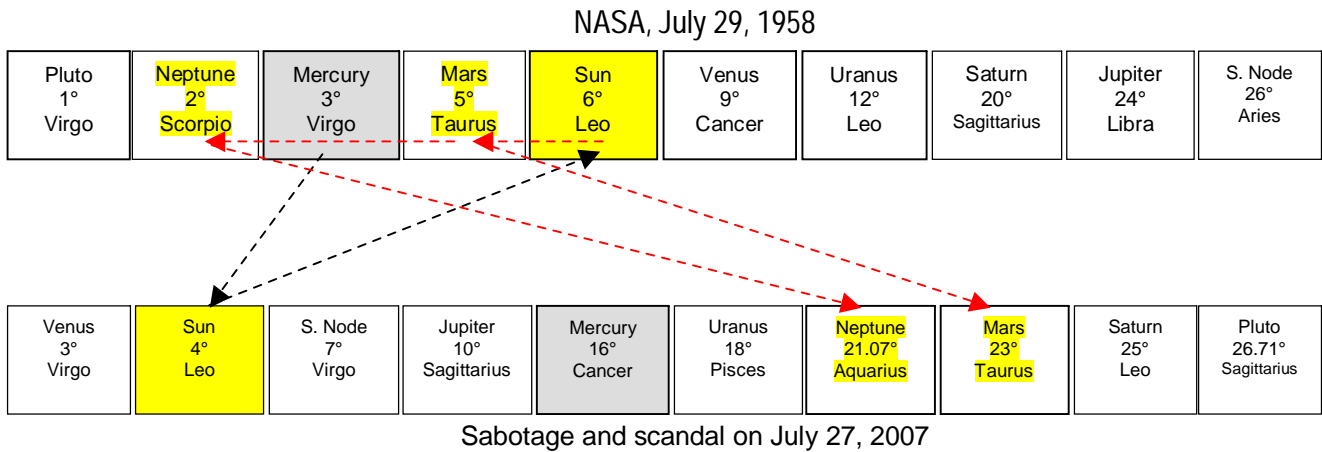

The US space agency said the damage to wiring in a network box was intentional and obvious, but said it could be repaired before take-off on 7 August.

Nasa officials said the ISS computer equipment was non-essential.

NASA is subject to the same “solar” influence as discussed in the Kerry Theory Newsletter, Vol 2, Issue 3 (Mars and Neptune in bad aspect to each other).

This is because NASA’s natal Sun is sending “negative” energy to both natal Mars and Neptune when NASA became an entity. You can easily see that the transiting Sun (lower row) aligns with the natal Mercury (top row), within the 2-degree orb, which increases the natal Sun’s energy. It can now flow easily to natal Neptune and Mars because transiting Neptune and Mars (lower row) are presently “negative” and within the 2-degree orb of each other.

Mars “negative” Neptune brings situations or events that are just not clear and concise. Whereas decisions are based on incorrect information or the information has been falsified. There is a high degree of sensitivity to what others are saying as everyone has their antennas up, or like “satellite dishes” trying to receive every bit of information. It becomes difficult to make any decisive decisions because your conclusions will be based on inaccurate or distorted information. Actions and dealings made under this influence will be unreliable and even promote a “threat” because of the unknown factor. You will find hidden secrets that will be revealed under this influence and be distracted from important matters.
